

Fighting Mould and Mildew in your home

With the onset of winter many homes are kept closed against the cold and can therefore experience an increase in the incidence of mould and mildew. Mould, mildew and damp are the result of not paying attention to moisture in your home.

The most common areas subject to mould and mildew are high moisture areas such as bathrooms or areas where there is little light such as wardrobes.

The best way to prevent mould and mildew is dehumidification which can be achieved by the use of a dehumidifier or simply by opening windows to allow the air to circulate your home.

Buildup of mould and mildew is both unsightly and damaging to the property and your health. Superficial mould and mildew in your home can be cleaned with a mild solution of bleach on a damp sponge.

If you are living in a rented home, then contact your landlord to report the incidence of mould and mildew.

If you have any questions about residential tenancy matters, contact the experts. We are the specialists.
